Dr. Ross practiced briefly in Pompano Beach, Florida and Detroit, Michigan before deciding to make Venice his home. Dr. Ross and his wife, Antoinette, raised their children in Venice and have been very active in all aspects of its culture. They continue to uphold this tradition by gathering their many grandchildren, granddogs and grandcats at their home as often as possible.

Dr. Ross started his distinguished career in Venice in 1972. His first office was on Palermo Place. Dr. Joseph Thro joined him in 1975. The practice was relocated to Nokomis Avenue (The York Building) in 1991. Dr. Thomas Ruane joined them in 1992. RTR Urology had soon outgrown this office, and moved to their current location on Sunset Lake Blvd in Venice.

Dr. Ross has a very unique outlook on the practice of medicine, and life, as is illustrated by the following statement:

"I hope my patients perceive me as an extremely experienced, competent Urologic Surgeon that they can rely on. I enjoy evaluating and treating the entire range of Urologic disorders. I also hope patients see me as a good human being and third-generation physician who has a genuine interest in them, and their families, as people. I do not think anyone has ever loved being a physician more than I do, and I hope that comes through."

"My father influenced me to pursue a medical career. Outstanding mentors then instilled my enthusiasm in Urology. My education has been ongoing – it did not end with medical school, internship or residency. Today, it continues through my patients, who teach me something new every day. I enjoy giving personal and individualized attention to patients. They like having time for explanations on their own level, so they can understand their situation, options and alternative therapies."
